

Let's write an essay!

One of the main criteria for evaluating the work is harmony and proposals. Make a plan for writing an essay on a draft sheet. It is also necessary to write down the main thoughts, ideas and images that arose in the head while thinking about a given topic. A clear structure of the final essay is the key to successful passing of the exam. The classical structure of the work will serve as a guide of how to write an essay.

There are main elements:

1. Entry.

2. Main part.

First the wording of the thesis and its argument. The second formulation of the thesis and its argument. The third formulation of the thesis and its argument.

3. Conclusion. It should be noted that the volume of the main part of the composition should exceed the volume of the summarized introductory and final parts. It is permissible to use one thesis, if it fully reveals the topic, and the number of words is reached. Nevertheless, teachers recommend to formulate at least two pairs of "thesis-argument".

Introduction

This part of the essay should introduce the problem. The task is to reveal in the introduction the theme, problems and relevance of the work. Answers to the following questions will help: On the work of what author is the essay written? What moments from the biography of the writer/poet are known? What is the theme and idea of the work? Keep balance of content and form, as the secret of high-quality and interesting text.

Secrets of writing the main part

The main part is the space to illuminate all your thoughts regarding the selected character in which he found himself. An example in an essay on literature should be related to a given topic.

The evaluative nature of the main part is that you have to include your own reasoning in the work, reflect the evolution of thought, give an assessment of the main character or circumstances — this gives the work credibility and expertise.

Ending: summing up correctly

Prolonged reasoning in the main part of the work should gradually form a certain final thought. The final part is a place for conclusions. It is important to give a meaningful answer to the question posed in the introductory part.

An important stage of writing an essay is verification. Read the text, correcting spelling errors, punctuation and style. It is recommended to check the text in several visits, during each of which to check the work for a separate kind of error.
